Our topic is interreligious talks.

In 1910 the first world missionary conference in Edinburgh stated that the whole gospel should be proclaimed to the whole world and that it would be possible to make the whole world Christian in one generation. Today we know that this was impossible and we assume that the diversity of world religions will accompany us as a reality until the completion of the world. This is not a catastrophe. Rather, contact with people of different religious communities can help us understand our own faith better and see ourselves as part of a large human family.

Questions for discussion:

- 1.) Which stories come to your mind in which Jesus encounters people of other religions? What can we learn from that?
- 2.) What are your own experiences in encountering people of other religions?
- 3.) How do the great commission to make disciples of all nations on the one hand and a respectful relationship with people of other religions on the other hand fit together?
